

Helping Questions (Pick any city you want):

- Adding a picture of the city you like
- Telling about what happened in the city for you
- What does the city means to you
- Tell us about the favorite restaurants, sights, ...
- What is the history or mythology of the city
- What groups are working in the city

Anybody is allowed to add, change or delete the parts of the page while the Maker day is happening at the IndieWeb Camp Berlin, which is on the 10th of November until about 16:30 Central European time.

Berlin

Pretty sights outside

The East side gallery is a pretty place to look at. It has so many different styles and ideas behind it. It is right next to the busy street, so it can be visited at any time, regardless of when one has the time. One end is right next to the East Berlin train station.

Ljubljana

Quiet places to work

- The faculty of Computer science have multiple places and crannies to work
- The faculty of Economics is pretty big and they have a free open WiFi
- The Cankarjev Dom had a comfortable benches by the wall, that one can take a break in, and they have free open WiFi
- We have 33 city libraries over the city, all I visited have at least some space to seat and take a break
- People recommended me the museum cafes for working, including the City Museum, Modern Gallery and National Gallery

Cukrarna

Cukrarna (sugar company) is now a place where they have the more modern art.

It is more known as the place where way too many artists in Moderna had died in. (There is a lot of reasons why a lot of Slovenian people are not likely to happily remember the literature lectures from school)

Dragon

There is a dragon guarding the city. If it gets aroused, then we get floods. So don't arouse it.

Cinema/Movies

The international, artsy, and Slovenian movies are shown in Kinodvor. They also have thematic events, like the horror movies for Halloween or the author showings. They recently had one for one of the old Japanese directors.

Most non-movie goers know it under the previous name Kino Sloga, when they became famous for showing the erotic movies. You did not want to watch these movies from the balcony, so you didn't see something you did not want.

In celebration of that, they will occasionally still show the erotic movie. It is the only type of movie that has the age restriction (15 years old).

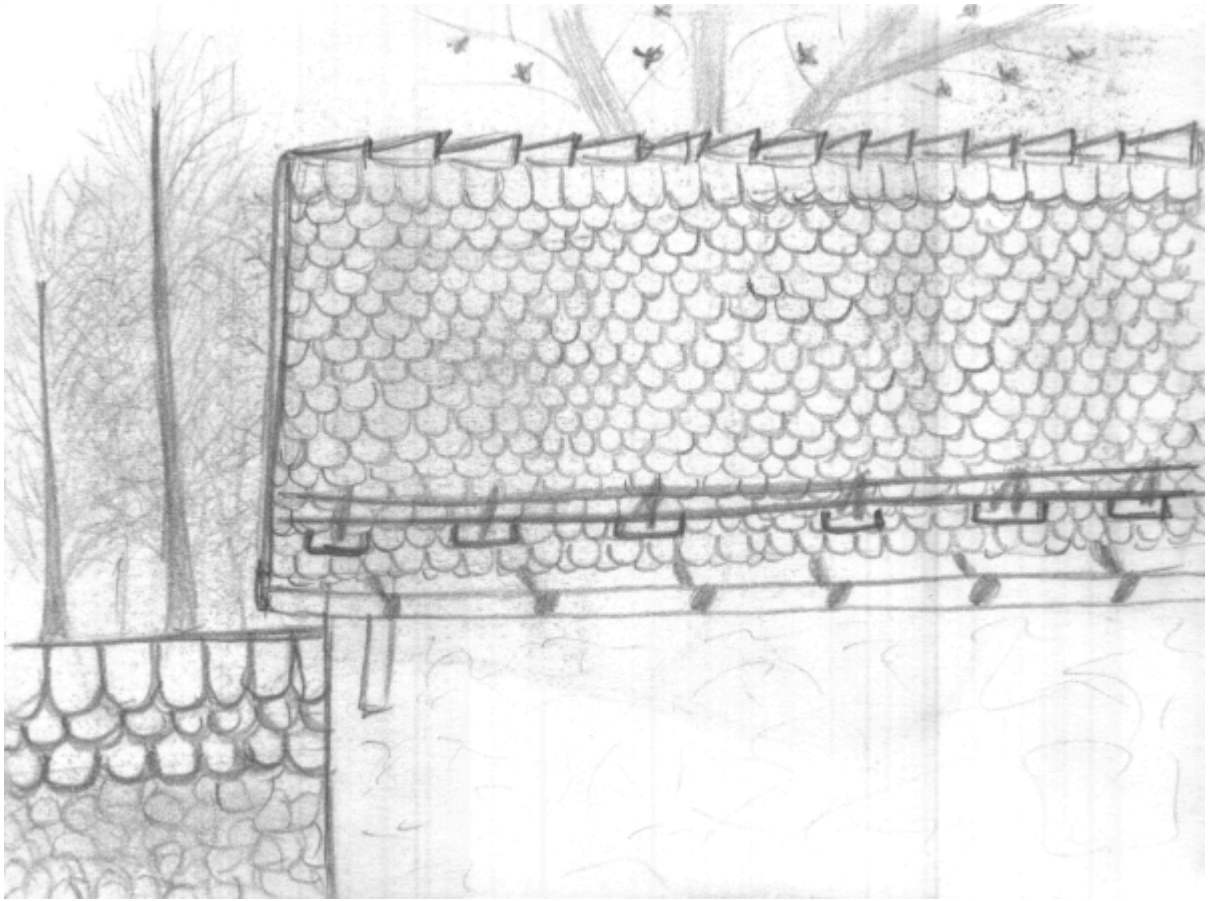

Blog posts about Ljubljana

- <https://alexsirac.com/ljubljana/>
-

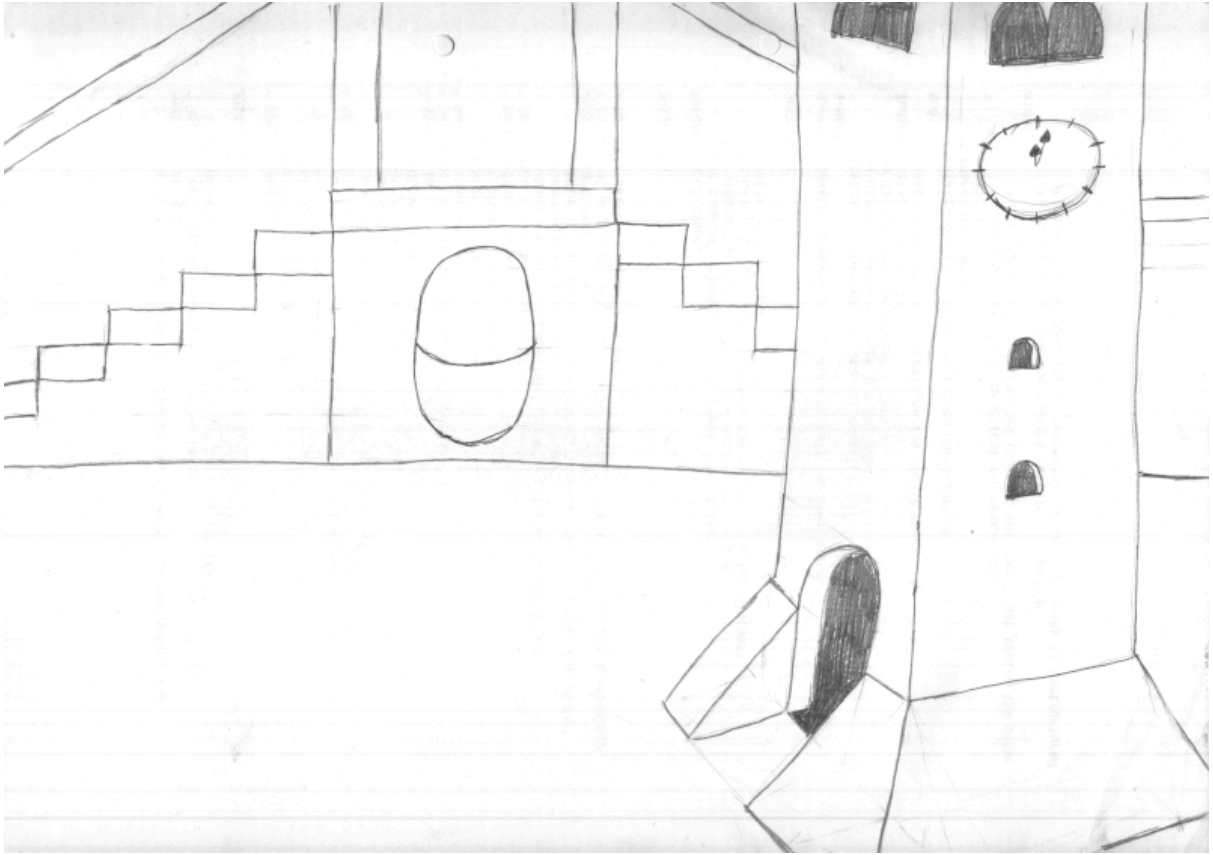

Books set in Ljubljana

- Dušan Enova and Vanja Osterc: Ekvorna in Ivana (Ekvorna and Ivana)
- Janja-Lucija Vidmar: Lucija series - majority of it
- Janko Valjavec: Traktor (tractor) - majority of it
- David Zupančič: Življenje v sivi coni (Life in the Gray Zone)
- Paulo Coelho: Veronika Decide Morre / Veronika Decides to Die

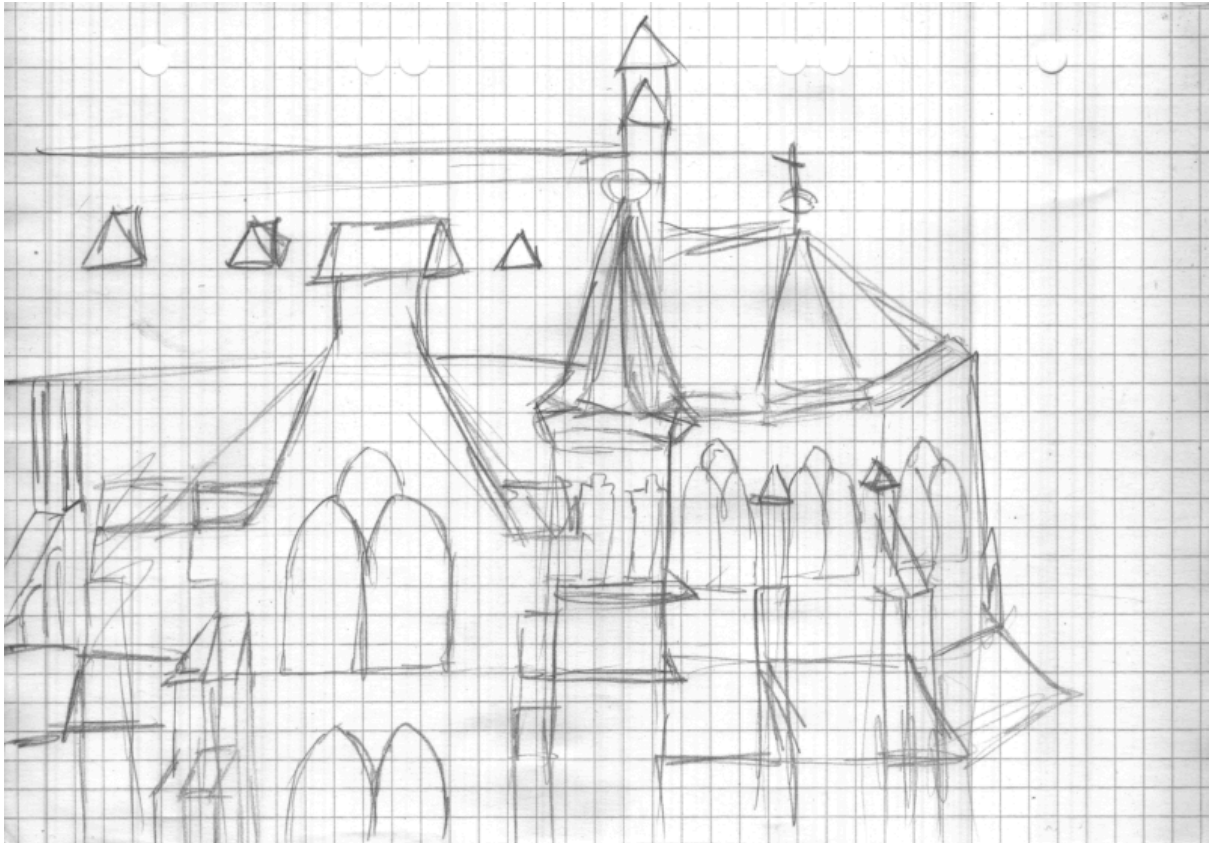

Umag

Vienna

Hearing music performed in public brings me joy. I love the moment when I first hear a note, and my mind starts to process the music. What song is being played? What genre? Then, I ask myself: Do I know the song?

I am often captivated by music played in public such that the only thing that feels natural is to take a moment to acknowledge that someone has taken time from their day to perform in front of others – to make a melody that wasn't there before.

Walking past the Mozart Opera House in Vienna, I saw an orchestra walk out onto a balcony, dressed in the most elegant of white tie attire – proper clothes for performing. Then, starting with a trumpet, instruments progressively joined, orchestrated by the conductor who was standing on street level.

I was immersed in the beauty of the music, the precision of the sounds – from pianissimo to the inevitable crescendo – and hoped that they would perform all day.

One song was performed; one delightful, magical song. Then, the orchestra went away for the day. I wonder: was this a one-off event? Had the orchestra been planning to play from the balcony and be conducted from the street for a long time? Or is it a daily occurrence? Perhaps a way to bring music to the people in a place – the opera – that is historically associated with exclusivity.

Whatever the reason and the context, I know one thing: that day, the musicians brought joy to the streets of Vienna, and left a memory that makes me smile each time I recall my journeys to the city. Vienna truly is the city of music.

Foška

The Foška church is a hot spot, that some people visit to get the good energy and get their wishes granted.

Please note that all contributions to this pad and other IndieWebCamp documents are considered to be released under the public domain according to CC0.